

Store employee attempts to deny entry to one not wearing mask:

CUSTOMER: Are you attempting to deny me entry?

STORE EMPLOYEE: Yes.

CUSTOMER: Why?

STORE EMPLOYEE: You aren't wearing a mask. It's a rule.

CUSTOMER: I am sorry, but you may not apply conditions in order to use your services, which violate my rights. Are you familiar with the 5th Amendment? It says that my liberty cannot be denied by anyone, as you are trying to do now. What is your name? I know that you are just trying to do your job, but my attorney will want to know your name.

STORE EMPLOYEE: Gives name or not, but reiterates denial of entry.

CUSTOMER: I know myself to be healthy and not contagious. Unless you can prove that I am contagious, then you have no lawful basis to restrict my entry. This is pure discrimination.

By: Dr. Cordie Williams and Constitutional Scholar Dave Oldham